THE LECTURE.

Kate Field Ably Entertains an Intelligent Audience.

An audience which was not large but composed of people able to appreciate an intellectual entertainment, convened in the Social Hall yesterday evening to hear Kate Field's lecture on Charles Dickens. The lady at once, without a tedious preface, entered into her subject, and throughout the entire delivery, which occupied an hour and a half, exhibited the most remarkable coherence and fidelity to her theme. Not at any time, even for purposes of illustration, did she lose sight of the image of the great author, humorist and humanitarian, nor did she permit the audience to forget even for a moment that she was discussing a subject, not several subjects. The ability with which she clung to the object in hand and that alone has rarely been equaled, particularly in Salt Lake. At times Miss Field was a defender, at others a eulogist, and again a commentator; when opposing the unjust criticisms and aspersions cast upon the author, she was as keen, perspicuous and earnest as any lawyer; when reciting some touching or humorous passage, it was done with the effectiveness and skill of an actress; and throughout the entire lecture the interest was thoroughly maintained. Incidents were so variegated as to relieve any possible monotony, and so skillfully interwoven as to make the entire effort a completely connected one. The text, if such a term be permissible, of Miss Field's effort might be found in one sentence—"Dickens was complete in all that he did; what he knew he knew, and what he did not know he never tried."

The lady appeared a little nervous at first, but as she proceeded this was gradually and soon entirely overcome, and she was all herself again. She was frequently greeted with applause, and at the close of the lecture, a number of prominent gentlemen, among them Governor Murray, warmly congratulated her.

The Sluggers' Squabble.

The following from the Denver Tribune does not agree with the account given here by Sullivan and Slade of the row in that place gotten up and carried on by the pugilists who exhibited in the Opera House Saturday evening:

"Harley McCoy tells a different story of the affair. He says that he and Moore went into the Arcade to get something to eat about 7 o'clock in the morning. They sat down at the same table with Slade and his friends. The latter, he says, were quarrelsome. Some insulting remarks were made, when Slade hit McCoy in the side and said, 'I can do you up, you sucker.' McCoy replied that perhaps he could whip him, but that he did not propose to give him a chance. McCoy then got up and left the table. Slade followed him to the bar. McCoy then hit him in the face, and picking up a heavy poker, started towards Slade. One of the men in the saloon interfered and got hit over the head, the poker inflicting a painful cut. While this was going on some one had gone for a policeman. Officer Dailey was found on the corner and arrested one of the Slade party. The man resisted, and the officer called on Matt Keefe to assist him. Keefe took hold of the prisoner's other arm, and then the trio started down Larimer street in the direction of the jail. They had proceeded but a few steps when Slade walked up behind the officer and knocked him down and then kicked him in the face, inflicting a very ugly wound. McCoy says that Slade attempted to kick the officer again, but that Keefe pulled the prostrate man out of the way, and McCoy stepped in front of Slade and hit him. Slade started toward McCoy, and McCoy snatched up Dailey's pistol, which had fallen on the sidewalk, and leveling it at Slade, told him to 'get' or he would shoot his head off. About the same time Keefe struck Slade with a brick, knocking his hat off. Slade picked up his hat and ran around the First National bank corner and down Sixteenth street."

The participants were subsequently arrested and fined.

First Subscription Concert.

If Mr. Van Praag's motive in instituting his subscription concerts was to give the public a taste of elevated music, he certainly succeeded in last evening's programme; if his aim was a financial one, it cannot be said that it met with the same success, for an audience that barely filled the two first rows in the dress circle was all that assembled in the Opera House last evening to listen to the first concert in the series announced by Mr. Van Praag.

What the audience lacked in numbers, however, they certainly made up in appreciation; the programme consisted of eight numbers, with several sub-divisions, three of the selections being vocal, and the remainder being devoted to the instrumental parts. The vocalists were Mrs. Siegel, soprano, and Mr. Hall, tenor. Both singers are well known to the Salt Lake public, and need no other mention here, except that the Ave Maria was the principal vocal achievement of the evening, and Sullivan's Some Day probably the least. Mr. Hall sang with excellent taste and feeling, and in Stella Confidente made a selection which admirably suited his voice.

The interest of the evening centered in the appearance of Mr. L. L. Van Praag, brother of the proprietor of the concert, and a new comer to this city; it was easy to see that the programme had been arranged to give special opportunity for Mr. Van Praag and his noble instrument, and the verdict with which the audience arose from their seats was that no feature of the entertainment had better deserved prominence. Mr. Van Praag is emphatically a master of the cello; it is very rarely that we have had an opportunity of listening to the possibilities of this superb instrument, and certainly not since the Mendelssohn quintet or the Thomas orchestra has Salt Lake been favored with such a hearing of its powers as that to which we listened last evening; our various conductors and music circles have long felt the need of two particular instruments—the clarinet and the cello; if it be true that Mr. Van Praag has come to remain here, the latter want can assuredly be no longer felt. It was a mistake in the management that something of the young gentleman's excellence was not heralded before the concert; it would have surely resulted beneficially to the box office.

The hand of Prof. Krouse was evident in the selection and arrangement of a high class programme. Mr. Weihe played with his usual taste and feeling, and more than that nothing need be said. Professor Radcliffe assisted at the organ and piano, but his name did not appear on the programme. The strongest quartette we have seen together stepped upon the stage in the persons of Mr. Weihe, 1st violin; Mr. Pederson, 2d violin; Mr. Van Praag, cello; Mr. Krouse, piano, and Mr. Radcliffe, organ, in the "Wiegand." They aroused the only apparent approach to enthusiasm during the evening.

The settings of the stage were appropriate and beautiful. The house, however, was poorly heated, and the chilliness seemed to extend to the spirits of audience and performers alike. The commencement of the subscription concerts may certainly be set down as artistically successful, and it will be strange if the remainder do not prove financially so.

The Funeral.

The funeral of Mary Van Cott Young, wife of the late President Brigham Young, whose death occurred on Saturday, will be held at 11 o'clock this morning, the services being conducted at the White House residence of Apostle Brigham Young. While the lady was an invalid for many years, her friends and most intimate associates had no thought that death was so near, and all were greatly surprised and much pained to learn of her sudden demise. She suffered severely at times during the later years of her life. Mrs. Young was a most noble and estimable lady, intelligent and refined, and possessing admirable and honorable qualities of heart and mind. Quiet and retiring in disposition she yet had a large circle of acquaintances, all of whom were more or less strongly endeared to her. They will deeply and truly mourn her sad and untimely death. Deceased was a daughter of the late John Van Cott, and was aged 40 years. She leaves two daughters.

Railroad Racket.

The piston rods on the engine which operates the flanger over the U. P. broke, on Thursday last, about five miles east of Ogden. The left-hand rod was the first to break, followed immediately by the right, and great holes were dug by the broken rods at each side of the track, averaging three feet in depth. The engineer closed the throttle and prepared to jump in case she left the track, which fortunately she did not do, although running at the rate of twenty-five miles per hour. There were four men on the engine and flanger, and it is safe to say that they had a remarkably close call. No blame attaches to any one—Park City Mining Record.

Consolidation.

Mr. Howard Sebree, the well-known and successful wagon dealer, has an announcement in this morning's HERALD in regard to the consolidation of his numerous business interest, which embraces Salt Lake, Ogden, Utah, and Shoshone and Caldwell, Idaho. The gentleman, however, still manages the entire business, as heretofore, and all the old attaches remain with him.

Gold.

The specimens of gold quartz on exhibition at Joslin & Park's, together with other discoveries reported from various sources, make the subject an interesting one just now, and show conclusively that silver is not the only precious metal with which this part of the western country is laden. In this connection the following suggestions on the subject may be interesting:

This question has been discussed by some as if not answered definitely by science. But the nuggets and fine gold found in places like all that have been worked in Montana, for instance, certainly had their origin in quartz lodes, whence they were ground by glaciers and other agencies and deposited in gulches and bars.

Other substances, such as oxides of iron, may become attached to nuggets while in the placers and take with them particles of fine gold which thus adhere mechanically to the original nuggets; but these particles never unite chemically with the original mass.

Masses of gold in the veins were doubtless formed by the union of atoms from some solution or vapor, active when the lode was formed; but no agency capable of solving or vaporizing gold has been found in our placer deposits. In the structure of veins we find ample evidence of the most potent chemical agencies; only sufficiently powerful to change the structure of gold, or to produce such changes as are implied in the growth of nuggets.

Oleomargarine.

It is understood, and from good authority too, that the importation to this city of oleomargarine, or butterine, as some of the more fastidious term it, is largely on the increase; so much so that it is considerable of a trial to obtain any quantity of genuine butter. The worst feature of the affair is that dealers are not always honest in their representations, and no doubt frequently, if not habitually, sell oleomargarine for the genuine product of the cow. Under these circumstances, one should know how to detect the spurious from the real, and a good authority says any housekeeper can prove the honesty of her grocer, or his butter, by melting it. Pure butter melted produces a pure, limpid, golden oil, and it retains the butter flavor. Melted oleomargarine, and the oil smells like tallow and looks like tallow, and a scum rises to the surface. Butterine is a mixture of dairy butter and fats. Melt that and the butter oil will rise to the top. Pour this off, and you will find the fats at the bottom, whitish in color, and giving off a disagreeable smell.

The waterworks are composed entirely of this firm's piping, and the complete absence of breakages or accidents of any kind thus far proves how substantial are the merits of their manufactures.
